> A Washington correspondent of the New York Herald tells a sensational story to explain the President's removal of Secretary Stanton. A number of desperate haters of the Republican party advised him to fight radicalism with arms, saying that 150,000 men were at his service. 20,000 being ready in Maryland, and 5,000 in Washington. By removing Stanton he could declare himself actual commander of the army and navy, displace such Generals as would not obey his orders, appeal by proclamation to the people to support him, and thus gather to his defense such a force as Congress could not resist. The writer does not pretend to say how far the President accepted this programme, or

AT The majority report of the committee in the Senatorial contest of Jones vs Onderdonk says: "To say of a man that he is white, is to afhis veins." From the same point of reasoning, then, it follows that to say of a man that he is a negro, is to affirm that he has no white blood in his veins. Will any of our wise, constitution-loving Democrats attempt to deny one of these propositions while they affirm the truth of the other. - Vinton Record.
